

Four Celtic Voices CD release: Four Celtic Seasons

November 19, 2014 – The Celtic Music Fan

Good day folks! All you music lovers out there will love what I have brought today. An album review plus a facebook event that has been making waves!

If you like Broadway Style of Singing – or classical singing for that matter then you appreciate the Four Celtic Voices with Celeste Ray album. The singing is strong, pristine and emotional.

As for the instruments, you will hear traditional as well as classical instruments. The mood is relaxing and it is overall magical.

Although the theme is not seasonal (or Christmas) the mood is suited for the contemplative spirit of winter. This is shown in one track called The First Noel, which I am sure you know how to sing by heart. You can tell that the talents involved in this project have pipes that have undergone countless performance. There is the confidence that resonates in every track.

The style jumps from medieval, renaissance, folk and even country. There are even instrumentals. My favourite is Scotland the Brave/Psaltery Dance. It has that spritely energy that brings a smile on your face!

The Blessing of the Three closes this album. The dramatic soprano reminds me of Loreena McKennitt. The vocal harmonisation is beautiful. There is a playfulness there that's been evident all throughout the album.

This is a perfect holiday album which you can play in the background if you want to feel the spirit of winter, with beautiful voices and instruments that will take your breath away! Thanks Anita Daly for bringing the magic around.
